| Half Day HikeDino Hike: Philmont is home to one of only two confirmed Tyrannosaurus Rex footprints in the world! Charles Pillmore, a USGS research geologist, was mapping the North Ponil Canyon in 1983 and mentioned the possible dinosaur tracks in his field notes. In 1989, he shared the photos with Dr. Martin Lockley, dinosaur track specialist, and the confirmation occurred. Enjoy this easy, half day, 2.25-mile roundtrip hike in the North Country of Philmont. |                                                                                                                                                         | Lunch in Dining Hall12:00pm - 1:00pmPM Program Block                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    | Lunch on the TrailPM Program Block                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | All Day HikesHart Peak Hike: This moderate, 5.5-mile roundtrip hike takes youto a beautiful view of Philmont's North Country. A short yet steep section will take you to the slopes of Urraca Mesa. The trail then gains elevation steadily as you pass through mountain meadows and into the shelter of a Ponderosa shaded forest arriving at Urraca staff camp. Next, it's a steep path up to Inspiration Point itself.                                      |
